

Professional Background & Experience

Candice Lim, The Unorthodox Coach, a leadership and ADHD coach who brings over two decades of organisational strategy experience to her work with emerging leaders, entrepreneurs and professionals navigating complexity with greater clarity, confidence and authenticity. Her work integrates strengths-based leadership development, coaching and deep organisational insight to help individuals discover how they naturally lead, create deeper impact, achieve meaningful personal and professional growth, and build a leadership presence that's proudly them.

Having worked closely with professionals whose leadership is shaped by differences in natural talents and executive functioning, Candice brings a strengths-based, ADHD-informed approach that works with a person's natural wiring. She believes sustainable performance is not achieved by forcing people into conventional productivity models, but by leveraging their strengths and building practical strategies around genuine constraints. This perspective underpins her work with both neurodivergent and neurotypical leaders seeking to thrive in increasingly complex environments.

Before establishing her independent coaching practice, Candice built more than two decades of leadership experience across the private and public sectors in human resources, organisational development, strategic and corporate planning, quality management and industry development. Her career has included leading the pre-opening Human Resources function for Wyndham Hotels' first two Singapore properties, driving hospitality sector capability development at the Singapore Tourism Board, and establishing a strategic futures and corporate planning department within a newly incepted statutory board. Throughout her career, she has been entrusted with building teams, designing systems, shaping organisational capability and leading transformational initiatives.

These experiences continue to shape her coaching philosophy today. Rather than viewing leadership as a collection of competencies, Candice believes it begins with understanding what naturally energises people, how they make decisions and how they navigate complexity. Her coaching therefore goes beyond skill acquisition to cultivate self-awareness, strategic thinking, sound judgement and the confidence to lead in ways that are true to who they are.

Known for partnering with leaders with busy brains to untangle complexity, Candice enables clients to deconstruct seemingly overwhelming challenges, identify the real constraints beneath the surface and transform them into clear, practical pathways forward. Her coaching creates the space for grounded reflection, stronger discernment and lasting behavioural change, empowering individuals to lead with greater influence and intention.

Candice is a Gallup® Certified Strengths Coach, completed professional ADHD coach training through the ADD Coach Academy (ADDCA), and is a PAAC-certified ADHD Coach Practitioner.

Beyond individual coaching, Candice has designed leadership development programmes, facilitated strategic conversations and advised organisations on talent, capability and organisational effectiveness in fractional capacities. She brings a unique combination of leadership experience, systems thinking and coaching expertise, enabling her to build coaching ecosystems that are both strategically grounded and deeply human.

At the heart of Candice's work is a simple belief: every individual already possesses unique strengths and untapped leadership potential. Her role is not to provide answers, but to create the conditions for people to think more deeply, understand how they are wired, and lead proudly as they are.